A story from the Archives

One of last First World War veterans loved Highlands

Listen closely to the whisper of the wwind blowing in from Telephone Bay, and it's like he never left.

Before he died in 2007 at the age of 106, Percy Dwight Wilson was one of two surviving Canadian First World War veterans.

He loved his cottage on an inlet of Telephone Bay at the end of Koshlong Lake long before a road could get you there.

His feelings for his wife Eleanor and his children Paul and Dean was rivaled only by his love for the Haliburton Highlands and his duty to his country.

Known as Dwight to everyone, he never saw action, but his desire to serve his country as a 15-year-old mounted bugler was not lost on the public the last several years of his life.

He spent practically every weekend at his Highlands cottage during his post-war career with Bell Telephone and the entire summer and part of the autumn with his wife when he retired.

But his retired son Paul Wilson, will always remember him for something more than the war hero.

When Paul was a boy, sleeping in his rented Stratford home, several years after the Second World War on boxing day morning, he remembers as a seven-year-old how his father came to his rescue.

"I was upstairs as a little boy in my bedroom. He ran upstairs and picked me up and carried me out," he said. "To me that's heroic."

After he was put down by his father, Paul still remembers the flames bursting from the basement entranceway as he walked, crouched, making his way below the haze of smoke on the first floor and out the back door and into the snow with his bare feet.

He adds Bell trucks were there before the fire trucks in support of his father.

Dwight, who was one of nine children, was born in Vienna, Elgin County, Ont. on Feb. 26, 1901.

After he trained as a young Cadet mounted bugler with the militia, he enlisted with the 69th Artillery Battery in Toronto.

"The newspapers all said he lied about his age. He really resented that because he was an honest person. I don't really know. All I know was when they were recruiting I think you sign your name and they fill in the details. That's my impression," he said of his father's enlistment three years before eligibility. "But I could be wrong. Maybe he did lie. We'll never know."

Words such as adventure, excitement and glory didn't necessarily motivate his father to join as a 15-year-old, his son said.

"By the time dad joined, which was July, 1916, they knew a lot better than that. The great armies of Europe had been absolutely decimated and they were trying to get recruits everywhere, huge losses both on the German side and the Allied side," he said.

"What he told me was that it was his duty. There were other people that he knew that were going."

There were more than 600,000 Canadians that served in the First World War.

He had his basic training in Camp Niagara and Camp Petawawa, Ontario and then was shipped off to Europe with the 69th Artillery Battery in Toronto. During the two-week voyage from the North Atlantic to England it was reported he entertained the other troops with his singing on the R.M.S. Grampian. His superiors, who referred to him as "Trumps" for his instrumental skills, after learning of his age kept him away from the front-lines, digging trenches.

By January, 1917, he was sent back to Canada and discharged as a minor and despite re-enlisting with the 69th Battery he was discharged again in 1918.

When the Second World War broke out he attempted to serve his country again.

While working for Bell Telephone, Dwight became a captain in the Stratford's 7th Perth Regiment Reserves and although he volunteered for active duty he was considered too old.

With Bell he held a variety of positions, including manager of the Stratford branch from 1919 until he retired in 1966.

One of his passions was singing, which led him to meet the love of his life, Eleanor Dean, who was a singer and pianist, while studying at the Royal Conservatory in Toronto.

He married her in 1927 and they had two sons, Paul and Dean.

He even performed as a concert baritone at churches and various venues throughout Toronto, including Massey Hall.

With a table full of clippings, awards and documents about his father and books and videos on past great wars, Paul remembers Dwight was highly regarded by the Canadian Forces in the last few years of his life.

When his father died, there was a full military funeral service at the Sunnybrook Health Sciences Centre, Canada's largest veterans care facility in Toronto and where he lived the past several years.

"At every corner the cops stopped the traffic to let us through," he said.

Although there was discussion, he would be buried in the military cemetery in Ottawa, Paul declined the honour to abide by what he thought his father wanted.

"It was my decision that he would not have wanted that because he wanted to be buried with his wife," he said, adding he was cremated and put on top.

Even when his wife died at the age of 94 in 1992 he continued to come up to the area.

The last time he came to the Highlands was in 2003 with the assistance of his son.

Paul remembers his father and mother spent the entire summer and part of autumn when they retired.

"I'm not sure how much she enjoyed it, but he just loved it," he said.

"After spending so many years in an office he just wanted out of it and he thought it was a very beautiful place. He liked the people here," he said. "That hasn't changed. [My wife and I] feel the same way."

A time for remembrance

KATE BUTLER
Special to County Life

WHEN I take historical walking tours through Haliburton Village, I always make sure to stop at the Cenotaph on Highland Street, often sharing some information about the 109th Battalion with the group. The Cenotaph is a landmark that many of us pass several times a week, but as Remembrance Day approaches we're reminded to pause and more deeply consider its story and significance. When the Cenotaph was first unveiled, not long after the end of World War I, the memory of the war would have still been fresh and painfully raw in people's minds. Every local family would have been touched by the conflict in some way. The names on the monument represented those who had lost their lives overseas, but, as Haliburton was a small community, those individuals were also friends and neighbours.

Pictures from the day of the unveiling show the Cenotaph draped in a Union Jack, with a large crowd gathered in front. In the background, piles of lumber tell another part of Haliburton's story from that era and acknowledge the way in which the war years forced different worlds to co-exist. Throughout the war, those on the homefront would have tried to carry on as best they could. Work in the local lumbercamps and sawmills continued, but events unfolding across the Atlantic must also have been on everyone's minds. Today, we may be accustomed to around the clock news access and instantaneous communication, but during World War I, it was very much a waiting game for those at home. Letters from those overseas could be infrequent to non-existent, and much of the news would have arrived in the form of headlines in national and local newspapers, including the Echo. An issue of the paper from May of 1918 features an array of articles with headlines such as "Successful Raids by Canadians at Lens" and "Desperate Fighting in Ypres Sector - Towns Change Hands Many Times." Local residents must have pored over these articles, looking for some new insight or some reassurance that the war, then nearly four years in duration, would soon end. These headlines shared the pages with local news of visitors to the community and social events, many of which served the dual purpose of raising morale and raising much needed funds to support the war effort.

The war would come to a close approximately six months after that issue of Echo was published, but its impacts would be felt long afterwards. At the time, it was referred to as "The Great War" or "The War to End All Wars", because it was thought that such a conflict could never happen again. As we know, just over twenty years later, another conflict would mean that more names would be added to cenotaphs across the country and around the world.

I hope that you'll take time this Nov. 11 to mark Remembrance Day. Perhaps you'll choose to wear a poppy, attend one of the many ceremonies taking place across Haliburton County or read a historical account. You might even decide to begin to look into your own family's history, so as to pay tribute to those who served or contributed on the homefront. Though a century may separate us from the unveiling of the Centotaph, its constant presence also reminds us that any day and indeed every day is a good time for remembrance. Lest we forget.

Top 10 ways deer slip past hunters

The rifle season for deer is now in full swing. This means many hunters will be wondering how that deer just slipped right by them. Well, they are masters of adaptation. And they are also creative. With that in mind, here are the top 10 ways deer slip past hunters.

2. Judicious use of umbrella.
3. Fake moustache. Dark sunglasses.
4. Park bench and newspaper.

Give peace a chance

He's a writer, fully loaded, eyes wide open, nostrils flared Though he uses words to cipher, never has he truly dared
In the face of overload, to rage against this ego-world
First he wished to hide in basement, senses off, with teddy curled

Yet his secret feelings rumble, show themselves, become a rant Couched, though real, in tender language, no tone meant to disenchant
Where each soul returns to nature, not in righteousness of thought But to redirect 'poor me' to 'look at everything I've got'

'I've got shelter, education, freedoms I'll bestow on kids Space and sky and say in systems: sleep comes quick behind eyelids'
But this writer lies awake despite the peace beyond his bed
He's been tense with different anger, laced this year with different dread

'I am old and very tired; I am frightened, maybe weak
But I have a magic power which enables me to speak
Whether rhyming, whether music, whether stroking grandchild's hair
I'll use words as superpower; I'll push LOVE NOT WAR with care'

Degeer commits to NCAA university for hockey

VIVIAN COLLINGS
County Life Editor

At only 15-years-old, Cheyenne Degeer has committed to St. Lawrence University in Canton New York for hockey when she graduates from Haliburton Highlands Secondary School.

As an National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Division 1 school, her dad, Tim Degeer, says its nearly the equivalent to the NHL for women.

The Grade 11 student has also been selected to represent Team Ontario at the National Women's U18 Championship being held in Dawson Creek, British Columbia from Nov. 5 to 11 on "team blue."

"I've been playing hockey since I was two and started in Wilberforce," Cheyenne said. "I love the competition and the people I get to meet. I've met so many amazing teammates and coaches in all the years I've played hockey. I have such great memories and experiences."

Tim explained that US universities have been watching Cheyenne play for years, but they weren't allowed to reach out until she finished Grade 10.

"We talked to several schools over the course of the summer, then did some visits, and then you've got an opportunity to make verbal commitments when they decide if they want to offer you a spot," Tim said.

Cheyenne Degeer has been recruited to play for St. Lawrence University in Canton, New York in 2025 after she's graduated from Haliburton Highlands Secondary School. /Submitted

The lifelong Haliburton County resident said St. Lawrence stuck out to her among the rest.

"I really liked the town, it's a small town very similar to Haliburton. It made me feel like I was at home," she said. "I also really liked the hockey program, the coaches and players they have there. It's also really close to Ontario."

Tim added that many influential hockey players started out at St. Lawrence.

"It's a small school, but it's almost like a hockey museum. There's a lot of history there that goes back decades in both the women's and men's programs," Tim said. "A lot of NHLers historically have gone through St. Lawrence."

Until 2025, Degeer plays for the Central York Junior Panthers which is in the Ontario Women's Hockey League U22 Elite league.

She'll miss the next 10 days of Central York games to go to the National Championships in BC.

"It's really exciting. It's been a lot of work over a lot of years. It's been a long process in getting here," Tim said. "We're so proud of her."

Heartbeats

Skeletons of trees, quivering beneath a stone Sky, their bones, cloaked in stones, Air, stripped bare of sound, as if the birds are listening to the stillness, too, perched on branches, or curled in nests, layers of feathers, muffling their heartbeats, fluttering, like the lone leaf I watch, float towards the ground, landing, soundless, on a skin of Snow, a sea of leaves, seeping through the shroud, bleeding on the side of the road.
I pause, for a minute, to stand beneath a pair of birches, their crowns, slayed by Wind, scraps of skin, dangling from their trunks, wondering how many layers of flesh, shelter the human Heart, that hammers in its cage, before bullets rip it apart, a heartbeat, silenced, before it could sing, families clinging to a fraying thread of hope, praying that it wasn't their son or brother or beloved, who died, that somehow, he survived the slaughter across the sea, that his battered limbs and charred Heart will return, the hills and forests of Home, healing his wounds, his flesh, scarred, his spirit, shattered, by the carnage of war, carrying the memory of his confreres, who perished, like a blister on his Heart, that bursts each time he remembers, the salve of family, the silence of forest, muzzling the bombs that explode in his dreams, when he wakes, shaking, in the dead of night, his heartbeat racing, as he's chased like prey, memories stalking him during the day, as his feet lead him into the forest, to walk amongst the trees, that are still there, to shelter him and listen to him, like when he was a boy, foraging with his friends, who didn't survive, their ghosts, floating around him, as he marches from tree to tree, his feet, freed from the prison of his boots, yet still they feel the weariness of plodding through mud and storm, the guilt of being Alive, carrying the heaviness of the burden, like a rucksack on his back,
his dreams of a future, sleeping like seeds, burrowed deep in the debris of his Heart, the young man not knowing that he will live a long Life, as he wanders through the forest, skittish as a deer, startled by his own footsteps, that crunch across leaves, pausing to rest beneath the birches, for a moment, to remember his confreres, who tramped alongside him, their bravery, propelling the young man to walk forward into the future, step by uncertain step, over time, his spirit, springing wings, to honour all those flutters of heartbeats, silenced before they could sing.

HHHS gets extra $1-million a year to stabilize budgets for healthcare facilities

MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

Friday's $1-million infusion into Haliburton Highlands Health Services' annual operating budget "is exceedingly good news," says the corporation's executive director.

"It creates for us for the first time a stable funding base," Foster Loucks said after the Ministry of Health announced the HHHS will get an additional $1.2-million, $200,000 of which is one-time funding.

While the money will pay for services and costs the HHHS had already budgeted for, at least it means the corporation won't have to have a deficit to worry about.

"This is not money that we have extra," Loucks cautions. "this is money that to a large extent has already been approved for spending."

In its operating plan submitted to the Ministry last spring, the HHHS included roughly $1.2-million more than its base funding allowed for. Some of the costs were:

• contributing 10% towards an agreement to pay emergency department doctors $110 an hour for 24-hour-a-day service at both Minden and Haliburton seven days a week. This payment agreement cost the board $200,000

• $300,000 on nurses' salaries in order to meet the Ministry requirement that every patient who enters the emergency department must be seen within 15 minutes of arrival to assess their needs. This required extra nursing staff from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. at both sites

• increments in collective agreements

• support staff to take over the services which used to be provided by St. Joseph's Hospital. St. Joseph's, which used to own both sites, provided the services for free after the transfer of ownership, but board members felt the HHHS was given low priority and wanted to be able to provide these services locally. Money will be used to pay salaries of part-time human resources, education and information technology staff.

Daughter hopes to continue Bill Scott's legacy

ERIK MARTENSSON
Staff Reporter

A familiar name is gracing some of the many election campaign signs now dotting the rocky landscape of the Highlands.

Laurie Scott, daughter of long-serving Tory MP Bill Scott, is the new federal Progressive Conservative candidate for Haliburton-Victoria-Brock.

"I'm genuinely concerned about the future of this riding and I want some effective representation and I'm willing to do the job," says the 37-year-old health care professional.

Raised and still residing in Kinmount, Scott accepted her party's nomination in front of 250 supporters at a meeting held in Lindsay last Monday.

As many will remember, Laurie's late father Bill Scott served as the region's MP for over 25 years and won eight straight elections to the House of Commons. As he was well known for taking care of constituents' needs, the younger Scott agrees that her father's reputation will bring more attention to her campaign and may help open a few more doors.

"Certainly he was regarded highly throughout the riding and worked hard to get that recognition. He certainly taught me a lot of values and I was taught to stand up for what I believe in. So I think that will shed some positive light on my campaign."

Having worked on several federal and provincial Tory campaigns over the years, Scott says she knows both the riding and the electorate.

"I'm certainly people oriented and I have a lot of
